

Anne Barrett Doyle, co-director of BishopAccountability.org, holds a photo of ex-Cardinal Theodore McCarrick during a press conference in Rome, Monday, Feb. 17, 2020, on the occasion of the first anniversary of Pope Francis' summit on clergy abuse. (AP/Andrew Medichini)

Christopher White

Vatican Correspondent

View Author Profile

cwhite@ncronline.org

Follow on Twitter at @cwwhiteNCR

Joshua J. McElwee

News Editor

View Author Profile

jmcelwee@ncronline.org

Follow on Twitter at @joshjmcelwee

Join the Conversation

Send your thoughts to Letters to the Editor. Learn more

Rome — February 27, 2024

Share on BlueskyShare on FacebookShare on TwitterEmail to a friendPrint

This February marked the fifth anniversary of one of Pope Francis' seminal efforts to confront clergy sexual abuse: the first-of-its-kind 2019 Vatican summit about abuse prevention with the heads of the world's Catholic bishops' conferences.

Looking back now, one of the leading U.S. advocates for clergy abuse survivors told National Catholic Reporter that although the summit resulted in "massive public awareness building" about clergy abuse, its wider impact has been "minimal."

Anne Barrett Doyle, who has tracked clergy abuse over decades as a co-director of the BishopAccountability.org website, in particular singled out for criticism Francis' signature clergy abuse reform Vos Estis Lux Mundi, first issued after the summit.

"Its impact has been insignificant, as far as we can tell," said Barrett Doyle, speaking in an interview in Rome for NCR's "The Vatican Briefing" podcast. The survivor advocate criticized the way the reform law, which created a new system to evaluate accusations of abuse or cover-up by bishops, does not share with the public which bishops are being investigated.

Some canon law experts say the Vatican keeps that information private so as to protect the reputation of accused bishops while investigations are still in their earliest stages.

Advertisement

"It resembles the laws very much before Vos Estis, [as] it is cloaked in secrecy," said Barrett Doyle. "We have no idea how many bishops have been investigated under Vos Estis. BishopAccountability tries to count them, but the information is so vague."

In her podcast interview, Barrett Doyle also criticized the structure of Francis' main advisory group on clergy sexual abuse, saying the Pontifical Commission for the Protection of Minors has "an impossible remit."

"They're supposed to sort of be monitoring the church's progress in safeguarding without being allowed to probe individual cases," she said. "That's laughably impossible."

"The truth only comes out in the individual cases," said Barrett Doyle. "Literally, the devil is in those details."

"I think the commission has been exploited by the Vatican to make them look like they're being accountable to a semi-outside body, which it isn't, and I think the commission has lost credibility," she said.

The full episode of the podcast is available here:

How do I listen?

From your computer:

Click the "play" button inside this article to start the show. Make sure to keep the window open on your browser if you're doing other things, or the audio will stop.

From your mobile device:

You can listen and subscribe to "The Vatican Briefing" from any podcast app. If you're reading this from an iPhone or other Apple mobile device, tap this link to listen in Apple Podcasts. The podcast is also available on Spotify, at this link.

If you prefer another podcast app, you can find "The Vatican Briefing" there. (Here's the RSS feed.)

This story appears in the The Vatican Briefing feature series. View the full series. A version of this story appeared in the March 15-28, 2024 print issue under the headline: Has Pope Francis failed to root out clergy sexual abuse? .